* A different system of enumerating these offences was adopted in the years 1855 and 1856, which prevents an exact comparison being drawn with other years. This change had the effect of apparently increasing the number of offences—e.g., a party of men about 20 in number visited the dwellings of 30 persons in the county of Mayo on the 27th December 1855, and drove them all on a back seat to pay more than the Government valuation for their land. They also levied contributions at each house. These cases were recorded thus:—

Thirty cases of administering unlawful oaths, and 30 cases of levying contributions. [CLARENCE] [CLARENCE]

Again, 22 threatening notices were posted on the night of the 18th January 1856, on the houses of 22 persons living on the one townland, in the county Mayo, threatening with death any person who paid any more than the Government valuation, and these cases were shown as 22 threatening notices. [CLARENCE] [CLARENCE]

In 1871 the previous system was again brought into question, namely to record similar cases as only one of each kind, when the outrages were perpetrated by the same party on the one occasion.

Notes.—On a revision of the printed Monthly Outrage Returns since the classification of outrages was made, it is found that 113 cases, not included in the second Return, were outrages which, when first reported, were treated as thefts, and could not, therefore, be included in the proper Monthly Returns. 43 cases which had been designated, were subsequently excluded, thus making the total number of outrages from January to December 1880, 3,670.
